FOUND AT LAST!

AN HONEST MEDICINE.

Nature's Vegetable Liver Pill.

These Pills have been tried in some of the most obstinate cases of Liver Complaint in its chronic forms, and has been found to contain cleansing properties that are unsurpassed, being made entirely from roots, and are approved of by the best physicians. A trial will convince the most scrupulous that they will cure liver complaint with its effects, such as dyspepsia, sour stomach, costiveness, indigestion, palpitation of the heart and general debility.

Don't fail to give them a trial, and you will be convinced that they are no humbug.

Manufactured and sold only by A. CARNAHAN, Adolphustown, Ont.

Our Little Folks.

THE BABY'S PICTURE.

"We must carry our beautiful baby to town,
Some day, when the weather is fair," we said;
"We must dress him up in his prettiest gown,
And wave his hair on the top of his head:
For all his cousins, and all his aunts,
And both his grandmothers, grand and [illegible],
Declare it shameful, and every way blameful,
To have had no picture of him this year."

He was three months old when we took him before,
And to-day like a lamb on his mamma's lap,
And the darling now has a twelvemonth more
Of bewildering graces from sock to cap.
Just look at his dear little laughing face,
At the rosebud mouth, at the violet eyes—
Why, the photograph-taker, that vanity-shaker,
Will think this time we have brought him a prize!

We carried our child to the town one day.
The skies were soft and the air was cool.
We robed him richly in fine array—
Ribbons and lace, and Swiss and tulle;
He looked like a Prince in the artist's chair,
Sitting erect, and brave, and grand,
With a big red apple he scarce could grapple
Held close in the palm of one dimpled hand.

"He is taking it now!" We held our breath,
We furtively peeped from behind the screen.
"What a pose!" we whispered, then still as death
Waited—and baby was all serene
Till the critical moment, when, behold,
The sun was catching that lovely look,
Such a terrible roar it shook the floor!
And that was the picture the artist took.

A wrinkled face, and close-shut eyes,
And a mouth that opened so very wide,
That our dear little sister, sibyl-wise,
Declares she can see the cry inside.
Aunts, and cousins, and grandmothers dear
Haven't got over their anger yet!
But we thought it was funny, and paid our money
For that strange phase of our precious pet.

Ah! children, older than baby, think,
Dear little children, blithe and sweet,
With your curls of gold, and your cheeks of pink,
[illegible]

LADIES' COLUMN.

Fashion Notes.

—Tucked dresses grow in favor.

—Veils of rose-colored illusion are worn by pale girls in England.

—Plaitings of fine India silk in delicate tints are used to trim baby cloaks.

—Summer slippers are made of unbleached linen trimmed with alpaca braid.

—Shawl patterned stuffs in gold and orange are used to heighten black dresses.

—Young girls wear their hair in a broad queue, fastened by a bow of bright ribbon.

—A dress embroidered in thirty different silks was recently worn at a Newport ball.

—Jersey bodices are turned inside out to show the lining according to the latest caprice.

—A new ulster pattern is almost tight fitting and has a plait at the back forming the skirt.

—The thinnest of starch is used to stiffen underskirts since the day of soft stuffs came in.

—White Japanese sashes, embroidered in bright colors, are worn with dark woolen gowns.

—The bows worn on sleeves are now set on the inside seam instead of the outside, as formerly.

—Thin striped stuffs, when shirred at all, are worked with great care, so as to draw the stripes into patterns.

—It is impossible to name a material too brilliant or too rich to be used for an outside garment this summer.

—Narrow net lace edge with saw-tooth points is substituted for dotted net. It is gathered in double rows around the neck and wrists of gowns.

—Belts are not worn with the fashionable shirred basques, but two pieces of embroidery, set edge to edge are set at the waist line between the shirred spaces.

—Boiling satin is the proper test for it. If weighted with lead it will curl up like plaster and will become very dull, but if good it will be scarcely changed by the trial.

—Three hundred lace workers have toiled four months on the Princess Stephanie's wedding veil, and it is not done yet. It contains five hundred large, and a thousand small pieces.

—The most fashionable way of making lawn dresses is to have the waist rather loose instead of tight fitting. The shoulder seams set closely, but the rest of the waist is too large in every way.

—Ribbons three different widths are used to trim the waists of dresses, the widest forming sash bows, the narrowest a rosette at the front of the waist, and that of medium width making the bows for the neck and sleeves.

A Pleasant Girl.

A traveller in Norway came to a village, early one morning, and was struck by the air of gloom which prevaded the streets. Unable to speak a word of the language, he could not ask the cause of this, and concluded that some sickness or financial trouble had fallen upon the community.

As the day wore toward noon, however, the houses were closed, shop windows were covered, all trade and business ceased. It was a death, then?

Presently he saw the people gathering for the funeral. There were the village officials, the noblemen from the neighboring chateau, and apparently every man, woman and child in the village. It must be some dignitary of the church who was dead, or some county official.

Tampering with the Body.

Professor Flower, F. R. S., lately delivered a very interesting lecture at the Royal Institution, London, before a crowded audience, on Fashion in deformity. He passed in review the various methods adopted by different nations and at different ages of deformity or altering the natural form of some portion of the body, in obedience to the dictates of fashion. The various practices of shaving, cutting, and dressing the hair and beard, and tattooing the skin, were alluded to by him; but more attention was given to the disfigurement of the nose, lips, and ears, by cutting holes and inserting various substances through them—almost identical customs being described among people living in the most remote regions of the world. The fantastic methods of filing and chipping the front teeth into different patterns, practised by the Malays and some African negroes, were then noticed. An account of the mode of altering the form of the head, which prevailed once extensively in Europe, and was almost universally adopted in Peru and on the western coast of North America, was followed by a description of the effects produced upon the feet of civilized races by the unnatural form of the boot commonly worn; the evils of pointed toes and high heels being exemplified by diagrams and specimens. The construction of the waist was next noticed, the figure of the Venus of Milo and one taken from the last Paris fashion-book being compared and contrasted. All these customs were shown to arise from a similar propensity, which manifested itself in the human mind under all conditions of civilization, to tamper with a form which good sense as well as good taste ought to teach was the most perfect that could be designed. The origin of these fashions was mostly lost in obscurity, all attempts to solve them being little more than guesses. Some of them have become associated with superstitious observances, and have been spread and perpetuated: some have been vaguely thought to be vaguely hygienic, most have some relation to conventional standards of improved personal appearance, but whatever their origin, the desire to conform to custom [illegible], and not to appear singular, is the [illegible] motive which leads to their [illegible]. The violation of taste produced by these conventional standards, [illegible] itself in the Malay [illegible] preference of black teeth to those of the most pearly whiteness; in the Botocudo, Negro, and American Botocudos, in [illegible] and ears, which are enormously [illegible] eyes hideously enlarged by [illegible] plugs inserted through them; in the Chinook Indian, by contempt of any head which is not flattened like a pancake or elongated like a sugar loaf [illegible] played among ourselves by the [illegible] of unnaturally pointed [illegible] waists.

A New Type-Composing Machine

A new type-composing machine, invented by Mr. Winder, of Bolton, Eng., was lately exhibited on the premises of Mr. John Heywood, Ridgefield, Manchester. It is of simple design, and appears to do its work very effectively. The type is held in an upright case, divided by metal plates into a number of compartments corresponding to the number of letters, spaces, stops, &c., in use. In front of this case is a series of keys somewhat resembling those of a piano, by the working of which the type is set. Slight pressure upon a key raises a lever which [illegible]

The Pleasures of Wealth.

The prosperous always say, with grave shakes of the head, that money brings little happiness; yet they seem to enjoy its possession, are proud of it in various ways, according to character, use it freely as a power, and will not surrender it without the very toughest fighting. A complete surrender of wealth, of the difference between subsistence and competence of riches, is, except in a very few cases of religious conviction, the rarest of all forms of self sacrifice. So different indeed, is the disconsolate talk of the well-to-do from their actual condition that the world suspects them of a little hypocrisy, or [illegible] to avert envy by declaring [illegible] unquestionably false, the [illegible] all earthly conditions. "Dives [illegible] wealth," sighs the man [illegible], "but how I wish I had a [illegible] complaint!" A few men, indeed, have boldly declared the regrets of wealth to be pretences, and have asserted, with Macaulay, that every guinea they acquire gives them distinct and appreciable pleasure. He was the most generous of mankind, but he liked his money. There was solid truth in Macaulay's idea, particularly as to earned money, [illegible] a good deal too broadly, [illegible] imagined everything [illegible]. Very few men, indeed part with wealth voluntarily, because very few have the courage to deprive themselves of any faculty or power they may hereafter want, and very few are without that pride in it which any distinction tends to raise, but we believe [illegible] depreciation of its value in which [illegible] poetry [illegible] of their wealth [illegible] directly [illegible] from it, which quite justify their shakes of the head, though they are slow to explain why the apples taste so ashy.

A Russian Superstition.

The strange ceremony of plowing around a village in order to drive away the cattle plague recently took place in one of the villages of Russia. The Russky Courier describes it thus: "In the month of March the cattle plague broke out in the village of Ozerk, in the province of Kaluga. In a few days thirteen hundred, and the peasants were panic-stricken. After warm discussion, it was decided to drive out the plague after the manner of our forefathers [illegible] that is, by plowing around the village. On March 14th, at midnight, all the women of the village assembled at a spot, to which were brought, by [illegible] that [illegible] to witness [illegible]

CHAPTER XLI.

STEFANO BENI'S UNWELCOME VISITORS.

The sailor crossed the piazza, and took a chair under the awning in front of a cafe, where a number of men of the better class were breakfasting al fresco. Here he called for a cup of chocolate, and sat watching till La Giulietta should come from her uncle's workshop. He had not long to wait. Before his chocolate was brought he saw her on the threshold. She entered a moment, as if listening to some one within; cast a hurried glance round the piazza; and then sped swiftly away, past the [illegible], and down the Via Piazza Bra. Saul did not see him, and he did not move. He only followed her with his eyes, as long as she was in sight.

"Chocolate, signore!" said a sleek waiter, depositing his tiny tray upon the little table on which the sailor's elbow was resting.

The man's manner was a trifle off hand, as if he thought that pilot-coated seaman out of place among his gentlemen customers.

"How much?" asked the sailor, his hand already in his pocket.

"One lira."

[illegible] threw down a two lire piece.

"You may bring me a cigarette, and keep the change."

The sleek waiter became suddenly respectful. His gentlemen customers who habitually dawdled away their mornings at the café were not wont to fee him in this way. They would send him to and fro, grumble at the quality of the absinthe, read all the journals in succession, keep possession of their tables the whole morning long, and not give him more than twenty-five centesimi for himself when all was done.

The sailor, however, observed neither his incivility or his civility. Slowly smoking his cigarette, he sat looking dreamily before him, seeing and hearing nothing. Meanwhile the Englishman and his daughters came out from the Amphitheatre, entered their carriage, and drove away; old Tutti hobbled along as far as the fifth arch way, to claim his key; Stefano Beni emerged from the depths of his workshop, and held a conversation with [illegible] the blacksmith over Padre Anselmo's [illegible] mountebank in a gayly painted [illegible]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 14, 1880.

A despatch from Canton, China, announces the destruction of a large town by inundation on the river, north of that city, by which four thousand people were drowned.

WRITS have been issued for elections of members for the Dominion Parliament in three vacant constituencies since our last issue. The elections in West Toronto and North Ontario will come off simultaneously on the 26th inst.. In Selkirk in the Province of Manitoba, the election will be held on the 11th of September.

A meeting has taken place between the Emperor WILLIAM, of Germany, and Emperor FRANCIS JOSEPH, of Austria, between whom the most cordial relations apparently exist. The journals of Europe consider the meeting as evidance of a new consolidation of the Austro-German alliance, and a favorable sign that peace will be maintained in the east.

A cable despatch announces that the negotiations of the Canadian Premier with London capitalists for the construction of the Canada Pacific Railway are progressing very favorably, and that a satisfactory arrangement will probably be arrived at. An enormous amount of money is now lying idle for lack of profitable investment, and British capitalists will readily undertake any scheme which promises anything like a fair return. Sir JOHN MACDONALD remains in England another month to complete the negotiations.

THE educational system of Ontario has won the admiration of eminent educationists in every part of the globe. At the centennial exhibition it received the highest encomiums; at the Paris exhibition in 1878, it was highly recommended, and information has just arrived that at the Sydney exhibition, South Australia, a gold medal has been awarded our exhibit, although it was only a partial selection from the articles exhibited at the French exhibition. This must be very gratifying to every citizen of the province, and especially to those who have assisted in laying the foundation, and bringing to such a high state of perfection, our educational institutions.

ADVICES from Afghanistan indicate that the whole difficulty between the British and the natives has been reopened, and that the native tribes, whom it was thought were conquered, are assembling under Ayoob Khan for another trial of strength with the English force. Candahar is surrounded with tribemen, and communication with the garrison is exceedingly difficult. It is reported that the troops have thirty-five days supplies, and as reinforcements are being pushed forward to their relief, little anxiety is felt for their safety, as the garrison is considered able to hold the fortifications against any body of natives that can be brought together in so short a time. Public feeling in England is greatly exercised over the recent reverse.

THE trade returns of Great Britain indicate that the depression that has prevailed with such lamentable effects throughout the country for the past two or three years, is rapidly lifting, the returns for July showing an increase over the same month of the previous year of about thirty five millions of dollars. As England was the last country to feel the wave of depression which swept over the commercial world, so her people suffered most severely from its effects. When the reaction sets in, its influence is also more generally and speedily manifested than in other countries, and the renewed confidence in business circles during the past few months is very gratifying. The demand for all kinds of manufactures has increased, prices have advanced, and in every branch of commerce the outlook is encouraging, and it is reported that future returns will show even a greater increase than those for July. British statesmen are endeavoring to impress upon the people an important lesson from their experience of the dark days through which they have just passed. A bill has been introduced into the Imperial Parliament having for its object the forcing of young men to practice economy. The measure places the government in the position of a paternal savings bank, and provides that all young men under the age of twenty-one shall deposit with the government a certain per centage of their earnings, to provide against pauperism in their old age. It is hoped, by the advocates of this measure, that it will have an educating effect upon the young men of the country, and that the enforced habit of saving in their youth, will be carried out in practice when they arrive at a maturer age. Though the results are doubtful, the experiment is well worth trying, and the workings of the measure will be watched with interest by all social economists.

No serious results will follow.

—Michael Bates, a man without arms, was charged at the Liverpool assizes on Tuesday, the 27th ult., with having committed bigamy. It was contended for the prisoner that if the ceremony of marriage, which took place at Manchester, purported to be according to the rites of the Church of England, the ritual must be performed properly. There must be a putting on of the ring by the husband, who should also give the lady his hand; but the prisoner could do neither. Bates was acquitted.

—A strange accident occurred to Mr. Lewis, of Lake, on Monday last whilst he was visiting a neighbor. When about leaving, late in the evening, he happened to yawn and opened his mouth too wide, producing dislocation of the lower jaw. Every effort to replace the bone proved unavailing, and Mr. Lewis was obliged to go all the way to Ailsa Craig, suffering considerable pain, besides being obliged to keep his mouth open the whole distance. Dr. Gunn speedily set the jaw, and Lewis is now all right again.

—A Maryland farmer proposes to utilize the potato bug for the manufacture of dyeing mixtures. The granger was opposed to the use of Paris green and scaled his bugs in boiling water. A piece of sheepskin got into the mixture by accident and in half an hour had changed to a rich crimson color. This arousing his curiosity, he inserted other materials, which changed first dark brown, then a chocolate hue, then pure yellow, then light blue, light red, terminating in brilliant scarlet, which was the permanent color.

—The Gananoque Reporter says:—A few days ago Mr. Wm. H. Hunt, who lives on [illegible] Island, left his own house to go to his father's place, which is only a short distance off. His departure from the house was observed by his two-year-old daughter, who started to follow him; but the path led near the shore, and the child fell down over a steep rock about seven feet, and broke her neck. After striking the rocks below, the body rolled into the water and was there found by the father on his return. The child's absence from the house had not been noticed, nor did Mr. Hunt know she was following him, the first intimation of the accident being the finding of the body. A large cut was found in the skull, and numerous bruises [illegible] on the body, caused by falling on the sharp stones.

—A young lady named Dubert, at Pt. [illegible], [illegible] Island, has recently passed through a fast of thirty-five days without [illegible]. [illegible]

On Monday of last week Mr. J. Marcie cut off the first and second fingers of one of his hands in the shingle saw of the cedar mill.

—Mr. and Mrs. Darling, of Boston, have returned home after a two week's visit with H. B. Rathbun, Esq.

—Miss McCallum, of Oswego, N. Y., has been visiting at the same place, and accompanied the above parties on their return.

—Geo. McMurrich, Esq., of the firm of Bryce, McMurrich & Co., of Toronto, made a short visit at Mr. E. W. Rathbun's this week.

—H. B. Rathbun, Esq., and lady, have been spending a few weeks at Orchard Beach, returning home last week by way of Boston, Saratoga and Oswego.

—Mr. Wm. Skillen, late of the steamer Varuna, has been placed in charge of the steamer Pilgrim, vice Capt. Carswell, resigned. Capt. Skillen has had about ten years experience on the bay routes, and thoroughly understands his business; he is an enterprising and affable young man, and will soon become a favorite with the public.

—Considerable interest has been manifested in the village over a single scull race between Mr. E. E. Hubbs, employee in the office, and Mr. G. F. Hancock, foreman in the lath mill. The match came came off on Tuesday evening, the course being across the bay and return, about two and a half miles, for $20 a side. A large crowd assembled to witness the race, the ladies of the village being well represented. Mr. H. Dafoe acted as referee and Messrs. John Hoops and F. Roach, jr., as judges. The men were sent off well together, Hubb rowing 36 and Hancock 31 strokes to the minute. At the turning buoy Hancock was two boat lengths ahead, and was leading all the way home, coming in six lengths ahead. Time 22 minutes, 6 sec.

—The people of our village were favored with a visit from Canada's most talented lecturer and humorist, Mr. J. B. Watson, of Toronto, on Monday evening last. Although the attendance was not as large as the talent and reputation of the speaker deserved, it is certain that the impression left behind will ensure him a crowded house on his second appearance in our midst. [illegible]

[illegible]

A very substantial residence for the accommodation of the farm superintendent has just been completed. The building is situated on a beautiful [illegible], which commands a view of the whole farm. The main part of the building is 28 x 36, with an ell in the rear 18 x 28 feet, the whole being very conveniently arranged. [illegible] the house presents a very tasty appearance, being surrounded on three sides by a wide verandah. The building is surmounted by an observatory from which an extensive view of the country for miles about can be obtained. The location is certainly a very favorable one. Burgess & Bartlett contractors; plastering, Sam. Wallace; painting, David Sale. Mr. [illegible], of Gloucester, England, has the management of the farm. He has had three years training in an agricultural college and is a thoroughly experienced practical farmer. He emigrated to this country about three years ago. No pains are being spared to improve the farm and its appliances wherever required, and it is hoped in the course of time to make it a model farm in every respect.

SHIPPING AND CUSTOMS STATISTICS.

Perhaps a few facts in regard to the shipping business of this port may not be altogether uninteresting. During 1879 there arrived 617 vessels, exclusive of boats going to Napanee and passenger steamers, an increase of about 200. Of these 270 cleared for the United States, and the remainder for Canadian ports under a coasting license.

In the customs there was collected for the year ending June 30th, 1879, $1,356; for the year ending June 30th, 1880, $2,-369, or nearly double during the latter year. For this fiscal year up to the present time there has been collected the sum of $479.

A steam threshing machine owned by Mr. B. E. Allison has been engaged threshing for several days and will be ten days in threshing the crop of the farm this year, which was the 235 loads stored in the barn and fifteen large stacks, the yield of which, it is expected, will be over 5,000 bushels. The thresher and engine were manufactured by Abel, at Woodbridge, and is one of the most improved patterns of engines for threshing purposes. It is usually run at about ten horse power.

FLYING McKITTRICKISMS.

Having given my readers a double dose last week, my letter for this issue will be very short.

FOREST MILLS.

I am informed that Mr. Thos. Storey, of Bath, has leased the grist mill at this place from Mr. Hugh McKnight. Mr. Storr is an A 1 miller, and as he will have a never failing supply of water, he ought to do a good business.

[illegible]

Mr. David McKim also invited me in to introduce me to his good wife, and I was invited to remain and take tea with them. [illegible] was shown some fine beef in Mr. Trimble's stall which was raised by Mr. [illegible], of Hallowell, being a [illegible] Mr T. invited me to his house, and Mrs Trimble, of Picton, [illegible] I received a [illegible] when I take a flight to that town.

I have noticed in my flights that many of the top buggies and carriages driven in this county are from Mr. W. [illegible]'s factory, in Napanee, and I decided to call upon him. Although he does not keep a very pretentious establishment he does a large business and employs a number of excellent workmen. The stock used is invariably of the best quality, made up by the best workmen that money can employ. He sells his carriages as cheap as any manufacturer can afford to furnish a good article and pay his bills honestly as they fall due. I promised to call again.

CROYDON.

I am requested to announce that a public fair will be held in this village on Wednesday, the 18th inst., when a large turn out is expected. All are invited to come; G. G. will be there in full uniform.

N.B.—I have made arrangements for a grand flight to Picton, on the second Wednesday of September. Particulars in a future letter.

GRAND CURIOSITY.

Dr. Tanner.

TRIUMPHANT CLOSE OF HIS FORTY DAYS' FAST—INDULGING IN WATER MELONS.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Tanner completed his forty-days' fast at noon. A large table of water melons, fruit, bread, &c., was spread in the hall. As soon as the time was up the crowd cheered Tanner enthusiastically. One thousand persons were in the hall and an immense crowd on the sidewalk. He at once drank a glass of milk and called for a watermelon, of which he ate heartily. When remonstrated with he asked to be let alone. At 12.15 he left the hall with Dr. Gunn, who took him to his own residence, where he will undergo careful treatment. Tanner's weight at the end of the fast was 121½ pounds, a loss of thirty six pounds.

At six o'clock Dr. Tanner ate several apples. At seven he was given a beefsteak weighing half a pound, the juice of which he swallowed. At eight he drank an ounce of wine, and then slept until ten, when he awoke and chatted cheerfully. Dr. Work said he did not think any trouble would arise from Dr. Tanner's undertaking. He had gone against the advice of all physicians, seemingly with a beneficial result. At a late hour Dr. Tanner was resting quietly.

[illegible]

boy asleep. All sorts of rumours were rife as to the number killed, but as one after another of the frightened boys turned up it was ascertained that the seriously hurt were confined to not more than half a dozen, though all were more or less shaken and bruised. One end of the roof held to the [illegible] wall of the adjoining [illegible] saved the lives of the [illegible] under it.

Three Months in the Career of a Notorious Horse Thief.

HISTORY OF THE MAN WHO STOLE HARRIS AND EMPEY'S RIG.

About two months ago we informed our readers that a man giving the name of John D. Gill had hired a horse and rig from Harris & Empey and forgotten to return it. Reference to the books of the firm at once divulge the [illegible], as the entries against him are invariably "to the Dutch man." He represented himself as a stock dealer, and that he had come to Canada to make an extensive purchase of cattle. Mr. Empey accompanied him about the country and if he had any suspicions they were completely allayed by the man's apparently straightforward manner. Later developments prove that "Gill" is only one of several aliases which he assumed as it suited his convenience, and that his real name is Reuben Kline. Seven years ago he was a wealthy stock-dealer residing in [illegible], Pennsylvania, but through dissipation he has fallen into want, and for some time has made a livelihood by some of the most daring acts of horse stealing on record.

The first heard of Kline in these parts was when he appeared in Napanee on May 15th, for the purpose of buying cattle. For some days Mr. Empey drove him about the country, and a large quantity of stock was bargained for, to be delivered in town at a certain date. On the 21st he went out alone with one of Harris & Empey's rigs, and that was the last heard of it for some time. About two weeks ago the firm received information that a man answering the description of the person that had stolen their rig had been arrested in Toronto, extradited, and taken to Syracuse on a similar charge. Mr. Empey at once started for the latter city, where he found his man caged in the penitentiary awaiting his trial, not on one charge only, but four or five of the same nature, and that there were as many victims present endeavoring to extract from the villain some information as to the whereabouts of their respective rigs. Mr. Empey at once recognized his man, but the shrewd Dutchman was as impenetrable as an Apache Chief, having assumed a new role, being apparently as crazy as a bedbug. A liberal shower bath, and threats of other punishment had no effect, as he refused to recognize any of his victims or disclose any information. On Sunday, however, when Mr. Empey was alone with the man in his cell, by yielding to a demand for $10 and promise not to prosecute, he succeeded in inducing him to become sufficiently sane to [illegible]

Loaded Ashes.

Several barges are lying in the harbor, being loaded with leached ashes for the American market.

Partial Paralysis.

On Sunday last Mr. Sam Phillips, barber, had a partial stroke of paralysis, one of his hands being affected, so as to prevent the use of his fingers.

For the Camp Ground.

The Flight will run to Unger's Island on Sunday next, at convenient hours, for the accommodation of parties wishing to attend the Camp Meeting.

For the Antipodes.

We learn that Duncan C. Ross, the professional athlete, purposes sailing for Australia at an early date, for the purpose of contesting with some of the celebrated men of the antipodes.

The Band.

Prof. Armstrong has leased rooms on the north side of the market square, and the members have already commenced practice. In a month or two it is expected the band will make their first appearance in public.

M. E. Church.

On Sunday morning next there will be no service in the M. E. Church, Napanee, as most of the congregation desire to attend the services at the Tabernacle, on Unger's Island. Services as usual at 6.30, P. M.

Sunstroke.

On Sunday last Gideon Striker, Esq., of Picton, M. P. P. for Prince Edward, was overcome by the heat and for a time was unconscious. He is reported better, however, and it is hoped no serious consequences will ensue.

Dangerous Lunatic.

On Saturday last a dangerous lunatic named Spencer, from South Fredericksburgh, was confined in the county jail, by his friends, for safe keeping. He will probably be removed to the asylum as soon as the necessary papers can be made out.

The Athletic Contest.

The race between Messrs. McLaughlin and Boyd on Saturday last, was a fizzle. The contestants ran two heats, Boyd winning the first heat, and McLaughlin the second, when the former claimed the privilege of finishing the match by a hitch and kick, or hop step and jump. This McLaughlin would not agree to, and the match fell through.

Albert University.

As was intimated some weeks ago, Rev. A. Campbell has been in this section, soliciting subscriptions towards the endowment fund of Albert University. We are informed that he has succeeded so far in raising $1,420, and the canvass is as yet, incompleted. It is expected that $2,000 will be raised on the station. A very favorable report.

A Vicious Bull.

On Tuesday last Miles Shorey, Esq., of North Fredericksburgh, had a horse gored to death by a bull. The horse was left in the field with the animal over night, as was usually done, and in the morning was found to have been gored to death. This is the second horse which the bull has gored this season, though fortunately the former one was not fatally injured.

Boom in Insurance.

The Orange Mutual Insurance Company is doing a thriving business in this county. Mr John Doxsee has been appointed agent for this section, and on Monday he made his returns for the week, handing in twenty-three applications, and on Monday he took four more. The "Orange" is evidently becoming popular, notwithstanding what may be said to the contrary by interested parties.

Fishing Extraordinary.

The fishing around Thompson's Point and [illegible] Island has been remarkably good during the past week. On Saturday last some fine maskinonge were exhibited on the market, the result of a days sport by E. B. McDonald and D. Davy—one weighing twenty-two pounds. On Tuesday the largest fish of the season was captured at the point, bringing down the scales at twenty-seven pounds. [illegible]

Broken Arm.

On Thursday last Mr. Clark Aishton [illegible], had one of the bones of his left arm broken, by being thrown from a wagon as he was returning from Belleville.

The Nellie P.

The Nellie P. Downey has been lying in the harbor for the past week receiving a fresh coat of paint, being caulked, and otherwise put in order for the fall trade. She is as neat as a bran new pin.

Grain.

Grain has commenced to come to the storehouses in small driblets, but no prices have yet been fixed. Small quantities of rye, barley and peas have been received. About 200 bushels were taken at Downey's on Thursday.

The Gosnell House.

This new hotel was opened to the public on Monday last. The place has been neatly and comfortably fitted up, commodious sheds and stables have been erected, and the house being conveniently located will command a fair share of the public patronage. We wish Ginsley success in his new venture.

Social.

A social is announced to be held in the Marven school house on Tuesday evening, 17th inst., under the auspices of Marven temple, I.O.G.T. Ice cream and peaches will be served in abundance, and an excellent literary programme, consisting of readings, dialogues, music, etc., will be furnished. Programme will commence about 7.30, P. M. Admission 50 cents.

Intermediate Examination.

The result of the Intermediate examination was announced in the Toronto papers on Thursday. Only three candidates from the Napanee school having been successful. The following are the names: Grade B., equal to a second class, non-professional. Miss Lucy Williams, daughter of Rev. H. Williams, Richmond; intermediate standing, equal to a third-class, non-professional. Chas. Andrews, son of Rev. Mr. Andrews, formerly of Selby; and Miss Annie Detlor, daughter of Mr. S. McL. Detlor.

Badly Scalded.

On Tuesday of last week, Mr. Peter Mair, engineer, was working at a small, upright boiler in Mair & Bro's. machine shop, when the mud port blew out and scalded him badly about the legs, hands and feet. He was sitting on a box at the time of the accident, and the bolt passed between his legs, being a very narrow escape—if it had struck his body it would certainly have killed him. He is under the treatment of Dr. Rattan, but it will be several weeks before he is able to resume his duties. His injuries are exceedingly painful.

TRUNKS AND VALISES IN GREAT VARIETY.

It was into a corner, the wheelwright understood in a moment, not as to what he wanted, but as to how he should say it.

"Signor Donato," he answered, with a dogged slowness of utterance. "You have been plain with me—I will be plain with you. I am in no haste to see her married. The longer she stays with me, the better content shall I be. But when she marries, if marry she must, it shall not be to such a one as you."

"What do you mean by 'such a one' as I? Am I blind, or dumb, or a hunchback?"

"You are not one of us. You say you come from Bari. That is just as if you said you came from America. I know nothing about it, except that it is hundreds of miles away—as far away as America, for aught I can tell. Your people are not our people; your ways are not our ways. We are of the north; you are of the south. We are of the land; you are of the sea. It will not do. Let there be an end of it."

"I cannot take that answer from you, Stefano Beni."

"You will have to take it," said the wheelwright roughly.

"I may have to take it, but it will be from ... I claim only fair treatment and ... Make inquiry as to my character ... means. Sift the question as ... please. It is your right. Or I ... lay the proofs before you, and to ... investigation of them as my ... The rest concerns your niece."

The wheelwright burst into an angry laugh. "By the body of Bacchus!" he said. "... A fellow whom I never saw before ... I never wish to see again, walks into my workshop, tells me he has taken a fancy to my niece at first sight, and refuses to accept 'No' for an answer!"

"I deny that you have the right to say ... unless you show that I am unworthy ... a liar."

"Worthy or unworthy, true or a liar, it's ... me to say. I disapprove, and that's enough."

"I beg your pardon," said Donato. "It is a great deal too much. To watch over your niece's interests, to protect her against a spendthrift, a drunkard, or a thief, is your right. But you are not justified in standing between her and an honest man, who would settle his money upon her and make her a ... husband."

"I have said my last word. I disapprove. Good morning."

... Stefano Beni took up his chisel and ... with the air of a man who had no time to waste in idle argument.

"... again that I will accept no ... In the meanwhile I go back ... and we shall meet again ..."

... the workshop.

Stefano Beni bit his teeth savagely ... from his chisel ... Was ever man so ... so thwarted! ... forsooth! That a fellow like ... as one might almost say ... dare to cast covetous eyes upon her ... justice! ... At ... there were not ... men in Verona as good as he! ... and his money ... and the devil go with him!

... was the indignant tenor of Stefano's meditations. Like most taciturn men, ... sufficiently angry when roused ... on the present occasion he was wrath ... He went in next door to see ... the blacksmith was getting ... be found his own apprentice, Mat... to hold the wheel, while Luig... in fact was ... done.

"... neighbor," he said, presently. "... have more book learning than I, and ... more about places. Can you tell me ... about Bari?"

"Bari?" the blacksmith repeated ... "It's a good long way off ... in the south country."

"But it is in Italy?"

"... of it is in Italy."

"And a sea port?"

"... a sea port on the Adriatic coast ... may see plenty of Bari trading vessels at Ancona and Venice. Our neighbor Sacchi, who understands the wholesale business as well as any man in town, gets all his oil from Bari—being brought by sea to Venice, it comes cheaper than the oils of Florence and Lucca, which have to be brought across the Appennines."

"Then it is a place doing a brisk trade?"

"... one more so. Don't you know the proverb, 'Bari for oil, Trani for figs, Otranto for pretty women'? But why do you ask?"

To that question the wheelwright made no reply, but stood looking silently on while the last nails were driven.

"I will settle with you for this job, Luigi," he said, "and Padre Anselmo can settle with me."

He did not answer the blacksmith to such that the cost of the tire was to come out of his own pocket. That was a secret between his little Giulietta and himself, and perhaps he was also a little ashamed of his weakness in the matter. Then—having to send the wheel back to the Golden Sun—he bade Mat... round by the way of the ... and tell his niece that he was ... to come home at midday to dinner.

"... pressing job on hand, neighbor?" ... the blacksmith, who had his share of ...

Stefano Beni looked glum, and shrugged ... shoulders.

"... he said, "but I'm out of sorts today and have no stomach for my food. That's all."

And so, with a nod, he walked off to the ... shop at the corner of the Vicolo San ... and bought him half a loaf of black bread and a plate of beans and oil, upon which frugal fare, washed down with another ... from the green pitcher, he presently made his solitary meal.

His rage was over now; but his thoughts were gloomy, and his heart was full of bitterness. He wondered, as he lit his pipe, and sat brooding in the inner gloom of his den, if there was in all Verona a man more ill used than himself.

All at once, breaking upon the midday stillness of the almost empty piazza, there came a sound as of some vehicle furiously driven, and the next moment—almost before he had raised his head to look—a hack vettura dashed up to his door. The vettura was empty, the horse was reeking; the driver jumped down, whip in hand, and walked in without ceremony.

It was Tonio Moretti, looking pale and excited.

"Good morning, Neighbor Beni," he said. "I feared you were gone home to dinner."

"You feared wrongly, then," growled the wheelwright, without taking his pipe from his lips. "Anything the matter?"

"Yes; I have something very important to say to you."

"It must needs be very important, to make you drive like that. Is the Adige on fire?"

"The matter is this," said the young vetturino, boldly. "I love your niece Giulietta. You know me. You know that my father left me five thousand lire, and that my vettura and my two horses are my own. I can keep a wife in comfort. Will you give me La Giulietta's hand in marriage?"

For a moment Stefano Beni stared at him in angry stupefaction; then jumped to his feet, and shook his pipe ... in Tonio's ...

"What! another of you?" he exclaimed. "It ... it is too much."

CHAPTER XLII.

LOVE'S MESSENGERS.

"Then it is Addio, but not for long."

Those were his words. How well she remembered them! Sure Romeo himself never looked and spoke more like a princely lover.

And now the morrow was come—the morrow on which he had urged her to meet him, at the Arena, at San Zenone, at matins, at vespers; and she had refused all his entreaties. If ever she had needed to go into the town, she told herself she would have put up with any inconvenience rather than seem to seek a meeting.

But it so happened that she needed nothing out-of-doors. So it was a day to sit at work while daylight lasted.

In the meanwhile she would not even go down to the well; for there the gossips were congregated as usual, and there Tonio Moretti was loitering, also as usual, casting impatient glances toward her balcony, and wondering why she was so late. But he might wait, and he might wonder, and when he was tired of waiting and wondering, he might go. What right had he to waylay and annoy her every morning with his unwelcome courtship? How dared he call her "Cara Giulietta"?

"Good Brigitta," she said, interrupting one of the neighbors on her way down stairs, "will you fill my can for me? I am so busy this morning!—and I will do as much for you another day."

"With pleasure, Giulietta mia; but there is one below who has been looking for you this last half hour. Ah! ah! I used to pretend to be hard-hearted myself sometimes, when I was of your age, and Carlo was courting me."

So Tonio Moretti, having lingered till he had past seven, went his way, wherein he ... missed the early arrival from Milan, and missed it for nothing.

But to-day she stood within sitting a little way back from the open window, and screened by a climbing of nasturtiums ... which all the summer ... her delight to train.

Then it is Addio, but not for ...

The words ran in her head ... "Not for long!" but for how long? Would he try to see her again to-day? She hardly cared to peep down through the nasturtiums, lest she should meet his eyes ...

Was his name really Romeo, or did he only say it was Romeo merely by way of letting her know that he loved her? That was a knotty point, and it gave her much to think about. If he were indeed Romeo, and if he were?

Then she brought out her ballad-book ... herself to learn it by heart. And as she stitched her seams and planted her stitches, she sang over and over again the refrain.

Was that a tap at the door?

The needle dropped from her fingers. She held her breath, listening, not daring to move.

The tap was repeated.

That he should actually come to the house—that he should venture to mount the stairs—that he should dare to knock at the door—this was not what she had not foreseen. She must keep quiet, and not open the door.

Then there came a third tap, and a boyish voice, not his voice, cried, impatiently:

"Is there! Is no one within?"

She ran to the door and opened it at once, and there stood a lad with a basket.

"The Signorina Giulietta Beni?"

"I am Giulietta Beni."

He handed her the basket, and with a quick "Good day," touched his cap and was gone.

Flowers! A simple wicker basket lined with moss and full of flowers—such flowers as she had never seen before! The girl hung over them breathless, bewildered, dazzled.

Then, one by one, being almost afraid to touch them, she took them out, and there at the bottom lay a single white rose bud with a slip of paper twisted about its stem, and on this paper was written in pencil, "Romeo to Giulietta."

All the rest of the day she shut herself up in the house, working, it is true, yet making little progress. Could she help it if her thoughts wandered, and her hands now and then lay idle in her lap? She hid the basket in her own room at dinner time, not daring to let the wondrous paradise of flowers be seen by Uncle Stefano; and in the evening, when it became dusk, she stole down with a handful of the fairest for Our Lady's shrine in the court yard.

So the hours went by, and when night came, her sleep took up the sweet dreams of the day. Then the moon, mounting slowly behind the roofs at the back, where once was Capulet's garden, flooded the ancient house and its surroundings with a tender glory. And when it reached the face of the sleeper, the girl's lips parted in a happy smile, as if that wandering ray carried a message or a kiss from that white bud on the table to the ... blossom of her mouth.

CHAPTER XLIII.

"CHANGES AND CHANCES."

"My little girl," said Stefano Beni, taking his pipe from his lips, "you are happy, aren't you? As happy as Lotta and Lisa, for instance?"

It was evening—the evening of the second after his interview with Cesare Donato. Giulietta, meanwhile, had heard no more of her stranger lover; but the wheelwright had this very afternoon received another visit from him. Beppo had been to Venice and back during the forty-eight hours, and had brought with him his ship's papers, a bundle of bills of lading, invoices, and the like; all of which including his passport and some letters written by a certain Canon A'ascio of Bari, in whose parish Donato owned a small property, the wheelwright had been unwillingly constrained to examine. That the man was respectable and respected—all, in short, that he represented himself to be—was evident enough. So much, at least, Stefano Beni was bound to admit. Not many maidens in his little girl's rank of life had the chance of marrying so well; that could not be denied. As Donato's wife, she would never need to turn her hand to household work; she would hold her head as high as the wife of any tradesman in Verona, nay, she would almost be a lady. The sender's letters to Donato were addressed to Il Capitano Donato. Worried and irritated as he was, Stefano Beni could not but feel a glow of secret pride as he thought of these things.

"My nephew-in-law, the Capitano Donato!"—how gradually it rolled off one's tongue!

Never in his life had Stefano Beni been so unhappy as during those last forty-eight hours. At first he was for sending his suitors both ... and keeping the whole episode in oblivion; but this was more easily said than done. ... he ... Each claimed his right to be answered by the girl herself. Then ... began to lay ...

The wheelwright made up his mind to be ... and ... his ... lips.

And this was why the old man, after sitting moodily by the fire for the best part of the evening, took his pipe from his lips and asked the little girl if she was happy.

La Giulietta, deftly mending her uncle's Sunday waistcoat, looked up with a glad smile.

"Happy? I should think so, little uncle. Far happier than Lotta and Lisa, whose mother is always scolding."

"But they have more pleasure than you."

"They go sometimes to the theatre, because their cousin Tommaso gives them tickets, but I don't envy them. I am content to be at home with you."

"I am a dull old fellow to be at home with. Many maidens of your age would by this time be thinking of husbands and homes of their own."

La Giulietta bent over her work and was silent.

"Have you had no such thoughts, my child?"

"I—little uncle?" she stammered, diligently stitching.

"Ay, you. Why not? You were sixteen your last birthday."

"Seventeen!" she interposed quickly.

"Was it seventeen? Dio! how time flies! Well, then, you were seventeen last birthday, and are pretty enough for a princess."

"Am I pretty, little uncle? Do you really think I am pretty?"

"Do I think that you don't know all about it better than I do?"

La Giulietta jumped up and gave him a kiss on each cheek.

"I am so glad I am pretty!" she said gaily. "I want to be pretty."

"Tell the truth, and say you want to be admired."

But there the wheelwright was wrong. She had "no such stuff in her thoughts." To be fair in the eyes of one—one only—that was all her ambition.

"I don't care a bit to be admired," she said, going back to her waistcoat mending. "But for your sake, little uncle, I should be sorry if I was ugly to look at."

"For my sake? Che! che!—you have been the light of my eyes from the day I brought you home with me from Cologne, a little motherless mite rolled up in a shawl, sound asleep, and not able to speak six words plainly."

"That was the day after my mother's death."

"Ay; and the neighbors thought I was mad because I didn't pack you off to your father's sister at Naples—she who had never even seen you, and had seven children of her own to look after."

"How thankful I am that you did not pack the poor little bundle off to Naples, Uncle Stefano!"

"Still, it might have been better for you, my little girl. You would have been brought up under a woman's eye, and among children like yourself."

"You have been as good to me as any woman—and better."

"Well, well, your aunt Francesca, too, as she is, has her own family to provide for, and what few lire I have scraped together are all for you, my child. Shall I tell you what has been in my mind this many a year? I have thought that by and by, perhaps, I might manage to buy a bit of ground on one of the hill sides yonder, and build a little house on it for you and me. I should like to sit in the shade of my own vine, and eat polenta of my own growing, before I die."

"Dear Uncle Stefano, you will never have ... enough for that."

"How can you tell? And then I have also thought that—who knows?—the Madonna might some day send us an honest, industrious lad whom I could love as a son, and who would make a good husband for my Giulietta."

Again she made no reply. What could she say?

"You don't want to live and die a nun, do you, my child?"

"Dear little uncle, the future will take care of itself."

There was a momentary silence. He saw that she was embarrassed, and her embarrassment added to his difficulty.

"I think I know of one who would be glad enough to take care of your future, my little girl," he said presently.

She dropped the button she was about to sew on, and stooped to look for it.

"Tonio Moretti wishes you well."

He said it with a sinking heart, for he began to fear that she might not be indifferent to the good looking vetturino.

"Tonio Moretti? I detest Tonio Moretti."

"But all the girls are in love with him."

"Then they are out of my mind, Uncle Stefano."

"I don't want you to love him—or anyone, for that matter," said the wheelwright with a sigh of relief. "I'd rather keep my little girl to myself for a few years longer ... Amen."

He waited, looking at her wistfully.

"If I can!" he repeated.

Still she made no reply.

"There is a certain Cesare Donato, by-the-way—do you know him?"

She vaguely repeated the name. No, she had never heard it.

"He knows you."

"He is welcome."

"Ma—body of Bacchus! I may as well out with it at once. He asks you in marriage."

She looked up, laughing somewhat nervously.

"I am much obliged," she said. "Who is he?"

"A man older than Tonio Moretti, and better off—a rich man, in fact. What you women call 'a good match.'"

"One of your customers, little uncle?"

"No; a stranger."

"But it is ridiculous."

"You are sure you know nothing of him?"

"I never heard of him in my life."

"Still you must have seen him. Think, my child—you showed some impatience over the Arena the other day."

She looked startled. A ... across her. Yet he said "a ... man." No, it was impossible. Her Romeo was as young as herself.

"An old signore and his two daughters—foreigners," she replied, hesitatingly.

"No one besides? He of whom I speak, this Cesare Donato, is a seaman—master of a trading vessel. Ah! you begin to understand!"
